PREAMBLE

Common view of participation

Participation means that staff and students can have an influence on the strategic policy regarding the organisation of the University, the working conditions and the conditions of employment. Proposed decisions which are subject to consent or advice may be involved as well as general matters about which the participation council need to be informed.

A participation structure and culture which simply serves to approve or disapprove decisions fails unless both sides are willing to conduct a real dialogue on the issues beforehand. The CMR and the Faculty Councils must be able to have a proactive influence on proposed policy and that can only happen at an early stage of the planning process.

A method of working that involves a proactive role for the parties involved requires mutual trust and openness, not only between the Executive Board and the CMR but also between the faculty directors and the Faculty Councils and among the members of the CMR.

The Executive Board and the CMR share a common view that what is involved is timely contributions from the perspective of participation that enable and allow the CMR members to put forward their viewpoints clearly without carrying co-responsibility for policy preparation and decision-making. Roles and responsibilities remain separate: The Executive Board is the competent authority and the exercise of the formal rights of participation is the preserve of the CMR.

In this set-up members of a participation body do not make any contribution on behalf of that body to discussions taking place in any working parties, project teams or focus groups unless explicitly agreed. It may and can be expected of them that they have sound insight into the direction of the developments desired by their councils and their constituencies.

On the strength of this, the Executive Board and the faculty directors inform the participation councils at an early stage so that they are able to function as a sounding board.
